

Liao Kuei-Hsien, Ph.D. is an Associate Professor at the Graduate Institute of Urban Planning, National Taipei University in New Taipei City. She is also the convener of the Taiwan Rivers Network, a recently formed (2018) activist group that tasks itself to voice for the voiceless streams and rivers in Taiwan. Her research interests are flood resilience, urban rivers, urban ecosystem services, and green infrastructure. Besides teaching and research in the academia, she also frequently publishes in public media and delivers public talks to promote the importance of ecological design and planning, flood resilience, and river health.
