

Exploration of a New Model of Social Co-Governance in Water Environment Protection, from the Perspective of NGO

Xing-da Huang

According to the complexity of water environmental protection and governance, it's essential to gather resources of all social circles to solve water environmental issues. Every stakeholder's opinions and advantages should be taken into consideration. From local social mobilization in Shenzhen to the combined protection of Pearl River water environment, Shenzhen Spring Environmental Protection Volunteers Association(SENGO) has gradually built an effective linkage mechanism with participation of local governmental sectors, the NPC representatives, the CPCCC members, media, corporations, research institutions, citizens etc. The exploration of a new model of social co-governance in water environment protection might be a reference for NGOs.
